I like the page linking parents to at-home activities they can practice with their kids. As a parent, I would also like to see the curriculum standards or rubrics on that page – so parents can connect which standard the activities are linked to. It would give them a concrete example of the skill when report cards come out.

6. Information is accurate and current.   1   2   3   4   ⑤

7. Site stimulates thinking and reflection or serves a useful purpose for an identified audience.   1   2   3   ④   5

Please explain your feedback
If the site needs to stimulate thinking and reflection, maybe you could create a contact form or forum where parents could submit comments, questions, or communicate with one another – regarding class parties, etc. In fact, giving parents a means to communicate with one another might even cut back on their need to communicate with you about small things. My son's Montessori site has this feature, where we can e-mail other parents or send birthday invitations, etc. Each parent gives permission for their information to be available so there is no privacy issue.
